

Travel Encounters

Whenever an encounter check indicates there should be a random encounter while the PCs are traveling or resting outdoors, you can roll on the Travel Encounters table. Each encounter is further detailed below in alphabetical order.

When you roll for an encounter, it can happen at any point in the travel day

Any Monster

The PCs encounter one or more monsters. Roll on the Any Monster Encounter table to determine which of the monster dungeon tables you should roll on to find the creatures in the encounter. You can find these encounter tables in Monsters.

Playtest Note: Only the Blood Dungeon and Undead Dungeon encounter tables exist and even those are incomplete. This will be updated in future versions of the game.

Bad Weather

The bad weather event lasts 24 hours and depends on the habitat where the weather occurs, or the season when it happens if the PCs are in a temperate climate, as shown on the Bad Weather table. Each climate or season has two events on the table. Roll any die. On an odd result, use the first listed event. On an even one, use the second.

Each weather event is detailed below.

Bad Weather

Climate or Season	Weather
Cold or Winter	Blizzard or Cold Snap
Desert	Heat Wave or Sandstorm
Fall	Rain or Thunderstorm
Spring	Rain or Thunderstorm
Tropical or Summer	Heat Wave or Thunderstorm

Blizzard

During a blizzard, the group's daily travel speed is reduced by 2 hexes. At the end of each hour a human spends outside without cold weather gear, they make a Strength RR.

2d10 + S

≤11 They take 4d6 P dam.

12-16 They take 3d6 P dam.

17+ They take 2d6 P dam.

A creature takes a cumulative -2 penalty to this test for each time they've previously made this test before donning cold weather gear, taking shelter, or experiencing a change in the weather.

Guides, scouts, and trackers take a double bane on tests made to fulfill their roles during the blizzard.

Cold Snap

During a cold snap, at the end of each hour a human spends outside without cold weather gear, they make a Strength RR.

2d10 + S

≤11 They take 3d6 P dam.

12-16 They take 2d6 P dam.

17+ They take 1d6 P dam.

A creature takes a cumulative -2 penalty to this test for each time they previously made this test before donning cold weather gear, taking shelter, or experiencing a change in the weather.

Heat Wave

During a heat wave, a if a creature travels more than 2 hexes in a day, they must make a Strength RR.

2d10 + S

≤11 They take 2d6 P dam.

12-16 They take 1d6 P dam.

17+ No effect.

Rain

In the rain, the group's travel speed is reduced by 1 hex. Creatures carrying rations must make the following Mind test.

2d10 + M

≤11 They lose 1d6 + 1 rations to mold.

12-16 They lose 1 ration to mold.

17+ No effect.

Sandstorm

During a sandstorm, the group's travel speed is reduced by 2 hexes. Guides, scouts, and trackers take a double bane on tests made to fulfill their roles during a blizzard.

Thunderstorm

2d10 + M

≤11 They lose 2d6 rations to mold.

12-16 They lose 1d6 ration to mold.

17+ No effect.

Guides, scouts, and trackers take a bane on tests made to fulfill their roles during the thunderstorm.

Merchant

The PCs encounter a merchant caravan that buys and sells goods as if it were an institution of a certain level (see Village in Characters). The merchant offers to buy goods for 1d10 percent of their value. The merchant's institution and level are rolled on the Merchant Sales table.

Miasma-Touched

Humans who are permanently affected by the Miasma are wicked, but they doesn't mean they immediately resort to violence when they encounter the PCs. These humans form bonds with others and are capable of showing kindness if they can get something for it. They don't have a death wish, and therefore don't seek death.

Roll 1d6 times on the Miasma-Touched Humans table to determine the humans the PCs meet. Then roll on the Miasma-Touched Encounters table to determine their reaction to the PCs.

The reactions on the table are prompts, meant to inspire different encounters with Miasma-touched humans so that not every run-in is the same. You can spice things up by putting your own spin on the prompts. A group of bandits might actually be looking for capable recruits instead of treasure. Cultists might have an artifact stashed nearby the PCs can look for. A cannibal might have a refined palate and eat only nobles. The encounter descriptions aren't handcuffs. Let them inspire you and change up whatever you like.

Playtest Note: The table below will change as more human stat blocks are added to the game.

Miasma-Touched ENCOUNTERS

d100	Encounter
01-10	Bandits: The humans are bandits, and threaten to kill the PCs if they aren't given at least 10d10 × 10 gc worth of goods. The bandits only attack the PCs if not given the money and they believe they have the advantage in a fight.
11-14	Cannibals: These humans want to eat the PCs. If they outnumber the PCs, they set an ambush and attack. Otherwise, they approach as fellow travelers (perhaps as merchants or crows from another village), and then wait until the PCs are sleeping or in a bad spot and then attack. If they can take just one PC to eat, that's a victory to them.
15-18	Competitive: The humans want to prove they are better than the PCs at something. It could be strength of arms, a foot race, or a trivia contest, whatever the PCs excel in. They challenge the PCs to the contest, making a wager on it. The winner can take any item from the loser. This is negotiable, as the NPCs mainly want to prove their superiority. If the PCs agree and lose or win graciously, the NPCs take their winnings and leave. If the PCs disagree or win and rub it in the face of the NPCs, the NPCs attack.
19-22	Cruel: The NPCs revel in cruelty for the sake of it. When the PCs find them, there is a 50% chance that the NPCs have captured an animal, human, or monster of your choice and debate how to make the creature suffer. If not, they approach the PCs as friendly, planning to kidnap one of them when the moment presents itself.
23-32	Cultists: The NPCs are a cult of Necromancer of your choice. They are willing to trade anything in their possession or perform favors for necromancy spellbooks and for spellbooks. They attempt to convert the PCs, and attack any who have stolen from or spoken ill of their Necromancer or their creations.

d100	Encounter
33-36	Death to the Gods: The humans hate all religion. They rant and rave about the gods abandoning the world. If any PCs disagree or openly wear or carry religious material, the NPCs wait for an opportune moment to attack that PC. If the PCs agree, the NPCs are pleased, and can be convinced to offer some assistance, though they won't travel into town.
37-40	Deceitful: These humans enjoy deceiving others. When they meet the PCs, they make up fanciful tales about encounters they've had with nearby monsters, dungeons, villages, and landmarks. None of what they claim is true. If the PCs believe them, the NPCs attempt to lure them into a trap, where monsters, animals, or some other misfortune harms the PCs. If the NPCs are accused of lying, they attack if they believe they can kill the PCs, otherwise playing it off as a joke and fleeing.
41-44	Despondent: The humans trudge through the world, crying and upset. Nothing matters to them, though they will defend themselves if threatened. They also lash out at any other person who tries to comfort or bolster them, first verbally, then physically.
45-48	Destructive: The humans just want to break something ... or someone. The NPCs simmer with rage and are confrontational and insulting, trying to bait the PCs into a fight. If the PCs agree with the NPCs and give their anger a direction at something or someone nearby, the PCs happily go off to destroy the thing. Otherwise they battle the PCs, hoping to kill or maim someone before running off.
49-52	False Bravado: The humans claim to be brave crows looking for treasure and adventure. They invite the PCs to come with them to confront monsters guarding a den of treasure. Together, they can defeat the threat and split the gold. Too bad these NPC cowards run off when any sort of fight starts.

d100	Encounter
53-56	Greedy: The humans want whatever they can get their hands on for as little work as possible. They want food, shelter, supplies, and treasure. If the PCs out match them, they appear as beggars in need. If the PCs seem like they can be bullied, the NPCs approach as bandits.
57-60	Knowledge Seeker: The humans believe knowledge is power, and they want books of lore and conversations with experts. They stop the PCs, asking to talk to them, peppering them with questions about lore until they are gifted a lore book, the day is done, cutting the PCs' travel short, or the PCs try to leave, at which point the NPCs attack, planning to kidnap the most knowledgeable among them and force them into giving days of lectures.
61-64	Mage Hunter: The humans don't trust mages, except for those among them who became mages only to hunt others. They attempt to separate and ambush any PCs openly carrying spellbooks. If none do, the NPCs approach and ask if the PCs know where to find any mages, revealing themselves as mage hunters if the PCs reveal themselves or anyone nearby as a magic user. Their aim is to kill magic users, claim their spellbooks, and leave.
65-68	Monster Hatred: The humans hate a specific type of monster that lives in a dungeon or POI nearby. They ask the PCs to accompany them to the area and help kill the monsters. As soon as they encounter such creatures, the NPCs rush in, eager to kill with no plan and no regard for their own or the PCs' safety.
69-72	Monster Obsessed: The humans love a specific type of monster that lives in a dungeon or POI nearby. They try to tempt the PCs into entering the place with rumors of treasure or cries of help. The NPC have rigged the place with bear traps and watch their favorite monsters eat if the PCs enter.

d100	Encounter
73-76	Sluggish: The humans beg the PCs for help, claiming to be lost and trying to find civilization. In truth, they have no destination in mind and wander the wild in a haze, caring only for themselves and no others. If the PCs agree to take them on, they slow the group's travel by 1 hex each day. The NPCs leave happily when a village is reached, turning off into the wilds again. If abandoned after agreeing to travel together, the next encounter while outdoors the PCs get is these humans ambushing them for revenge.
77-80	Suspicious: The humans are friendly at first, but quickly become suspicious of everything the PCs say and do. They believe the PCs have ill intentions, and quickly try to get a move on. If the PCs are clearly stronger, the NPCs flee quickly and prepare a guarder camp. If the NPCs believe they can overtake the PCs, they follow with a plan to ambush their camp later to wipe their evil from the world.
81-84	Thieves: The humans attempt to befriend the PCs while eyeing up their possessions. When an opportunity arises, they attempt to flee with one or more of the PCs most valuable items.
85-88	Tyrant: One of the humans in this group is a leader who the others worship as a tyrant. This NPC demands fealty from all they meet. Those who do not bow and call them their leader are captured and killed. Those who swear fealty are given a blessing and asked if they wish to join the company or start their own in the name of the tyrant. Should the PCs agree to serve the leader separately, the next time you roll this encounter, they meet the same group, who demands a satisfactory progress update.
89-92	Vane: These humans value appearance above all else. They praise well-groomed PCs. They suggest a bath to those covered in dirt, and plot to kidnap and clean those who refuse.

d100	Encounter
93-96	Violent: These humans want to kill something. They attack PCs on the road, offering to stop the violence if just one of them agrees to die for the others.
97-100	Wicked Crows: These humans are crows like the PCs, but they have been corrupted by the Miasma. They ask to journey with the PCs to a dungeon and split the profits. Once inside, these crows work together to use the horrors of the dungeon to systematically eliminate the PCs one by one.

Monster from Nearby

The PCs encounter one or more monsters rolled on the monster dungeon table of the monster type that inhabits the closest dungeon. The tables can be found in Monsters.

Playtest Note: Only the Blood Dungeon and Undead Dungeon encounter tables exist and even those are incomplete. This will be updated in future versions of the game.

Strong Miasma

If the PCs don't travel in any hexes affected by the Miasma today thanks to an upgraded beacon institution (see Village in Characters), then they don't experience an encounter.

The Miasma the PCs travel and rest in gets stronger for 24 hours. Every PC takes a bane on RRs made to resist the Miasma's effects and the translucent haze becomes an opaque fog. While this effect lasts, guides, scouts, and trackers take a bane on tests related to their travel role.

If the PCs are lost when this encounter occurs or get lost during it, they are magically transported to a hex that is 1d10 hexes away in a direction of the Ref's choice.

Traveler

The PCs encounter 1d10 other humans traveling on the road. The stat blocks for those humans can be rolled on the Travelers table. Then roll on the Traveler Encounters table to determine what makes the encounter noteworthy.

The encounters on the table are prompts, meant to inspire different encounters with traveling humans so that not every run-in is the same. You can spice things up by putting your own spin on the prompts. A group of humans who are lost might have a few Miasma touched among them who cause trouble. A group hunting what they believe is an animal could be tracking a deadly monster instead. A group of people searching for treasure might want something the PCs already have. The encounter descriptions aren't handcuffs. Let them inspire you and change up whatever you like.

Traveler Reactions

Unless the travelers are in dire straights, they approach others on the road with caution. After all, many of the humans outside the villages are Miasma touched. These travelers keep their guard up until the PCs say or do something that shows they're kind.

Playtest Note: The table below will change as more human stat blocks are added to the game.

Traveler Encounters

d10	Encounter
1	Animal Hunt: The travelers hunt an animal rolled on the appropriate habitat table in Wild Animal . If the PCs help, the travelers give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.
2	Battle: The travelers are battling a group of 2d6 Miasma-touched humans (see Miasma-Touched). Roll 1d6. On a 1-2 the Miasma-touched are bandits. On 3-4 they are cannibals. On a 5-6 they are cultists. If the PCs save the travelers, the NPCs give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.
3	Camping: The travelers are camping when the PCs come upon them. The NPCs welcome the crows with caution. If the PCs are friendly, they offer to share their meal, and the PCs don't need to eat rations when they next rest. If the PCs are standoffish or suspicious, the NPCs ask them to leave, attacking or fleeing if the PCs refuse.
4	Crows: These travelers are another group of crows, on their way to a nearby dungeon. Roll 1d6. On a 1-2, the NPCs invite the PCs to come with them and raid a dungeon together. On a 3-4, the crows are standoffish, suspecting the PCs of foul play. If the PCs show kindness, the NPCs share helpful lore about a nearby POI or dungeon. On a 5-6, the NPCs view the PCs as business rivals and make plans to kill them and take their stuff.
5	Injured: One or more of the travelers has 1d6 wounds and an injured leg, which prevents them from moving quickly. If the PCs help the injured NPC by healing them or giving them a mount or vehicle to ride, the travelers give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.

d10	Encounter
6	Lost: The travelers are lost. If the PCs take a day to help the travelers find their way, the travelers give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.
7	Need an Escort: The travelers had a larger retinue, but many of them died in a monster attack. They feel unsafe, and ask the PCs to escort them to the nearest village. If the PCs agree, the travelers give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.
8	Pursued by Monsters: The travelers are being chased by one or more monsters, rolled on the monster encounter table used by the closest dungeon. If the PCs intervene, the travelers take the opportunity to flee, leaving any of their dead behind.
9	Starving: The travelers have run out of food. They beg the PCs to give them something to eat. If the PCs provide them with enough food to last them 1d6 days, the travelers give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.
10	Treasure Hunt: The PCs find the travelers searching the area for treasure. The NPCs are cagey about their hunt, but they're looking for one specific item (perhaps rolled on the Major Interesting Things table). If the PCs help in the search and hand over the item, the NPCs give them a reward from the Traveler Rewards table.

Traveler Rewards

d6	Reward
1	Nothing. The travelers have nothing to give or consider virtue its own reward. Jerks.
2	A piece of useful information about a nearby POI, dungeon, village, or treasure.
3	1d6 × 100 gc
4	2d10 × 100 gc
5	An item from the Minor Interesting Things table
6	An item from the Major Interesting Things table

Wild Animal

Roll for the animal encounter on the appropriate habitat table where the encounter occurs. Then roll an attitude on the Wild Animal Reaction table to determine how they react to the PCs. Some attitude descriptions on the table refer to others, indicated by underlined text.

When the PCs meet a group of animals, it is up to you if all animals have the same attitude or if one, some, or all animals in the group have an individual reaction.

The attitudes on the table are prompts, meant to inspire different encounters with animals so that not every run-in is the same. You can spice things up by putting your own spin on the prompts. An asleep animal might be laying on top of something valuable. A treasure-seeking animal might have a hoard of shinies in a nest nearby the PCs can search for. An injured animal might also be territorial, and relax and allow PCs into their territory if their injuries are healed. A protective animal who is also hungry might get distracted from guarding their nest if given food. The attitudes aren't handcuffs. Let them inspire you and change up whatever you like.

Wild Animal Reaction

d100	Attitude
01-05	Asleep: An asleep animal is unconscious when the PCs find them in their path. Waking the animal causes them to become violent .
06-10	Attached: An attached animal becomes inexplicably attracted to a PC randomly chosen by the Ref. The animal follows the PC about and is friendly toward them, but frightened of all other PCs.
11-15	Curious: The animal is curious about what the PCs are and approaches them cautiously but openly. Any aggressive or boisterous behavior causes the animal to become frightened . Calm behavior causes the animal to investigate for a few moments then leave. Generous behavior, such as sharing food with the animal, makes them friendly .
16-20	Embattled Animals: Pick or roll on an encounter table for one or more other animals, humans, or monsters that are battling the animal(s) you originally rolled for. If the players aid the original group, one animal in that group becomes friendly .
21-25	Friendly: A friendly animal happily follows the PCs around for an hour, and a PC can make a test to become the animal's owner (see Pets in Characters). If the PCs are mean or aggressive to the animal, they flee.
26-35	Frightened: Frightened animals freeze and stare at the PCs, sizing them up. If approached with anything other than the utmost calm and caution, the animal either flees (if they are clearly no match for the PCs and have a way out) or fights until the PCs flee (if they have a chance against the PCs or are cornered). The Ref can allow a Mind test with the Handle Animal skill to attempt to turn the animal's attitude to curious .

d100	Attitude
36-45	Hungry: Hungry animals approach when the PCs are eating, drawn by the smell of food. If given at least 1 ration's worth of food, the animal becomes friendly . If the PCs don't share their food, the animal attacks, attempting to get some food and run off with it.
46-50	Injured: An injured animal has Stamina equal to half their maximum and is visibly hurt. They are frightened and considered cornered, but any PC who heals them turns their attitude to friendly .
51-55	Playful: Playful animals want to catch sticks, be chased, give a ride, wrestle, or other wise engage in fun with the PCs. They approach in an energetic manor, playing with other animals of their type if any are nearby. If the PCs engage in play with the animal, they become friendly . If not, the animal becomes violent .
56-65	Protective: A protective animal is guarding something and attacks any creature they notice who attempts to get it. These animals stand their ground and fight to the death. Roll any die. On an even result, the animal is defending a nest that has 1d10 babies or eggs (or egg sacks), which can be sold to a village's stables (each as if it were an individual pet). Otherwise the animal protects one thing on the Minor Interesting Things table.
66-70	Stalking: Stalking animals attempt to stalk the PCs from hidden positions. They follow the group until one or two PCs are alone and then pounce. It may be that they view the PCs as a threat or food or both.

d100	Attitude
71-80	Starved: A starved animal is desperate for food, and the PCs have something (or are something) they want to eat. The skinny animal approaches the PCs while displaying aggressive behavior. The animal attacks unless given a day's worth of food based on their size, at which point they gobble up the food then flee. If the animal is carnivorous, they may attempt to kill a PC and carry their body off if not fed.
81-90	Territorial: Territorial animals don't want the PCs invading their home. The animals follow the PCs, displaying signs of aggression and never getting too close. As long as the PCs keep moving through the area, the animals stop pursuing them when they exit the hex where the encounter first occurs. Otherwise, the animals attack and fight to the death.
91-95	Treasure-Seeking: Treasure-seeking animals approach when a PC wears or holds an item that attracts the animal. It's often something shiny or that looks like their food. The animal makes their interest in the item clear, and if the PC doesn't give it to them, the animal attacks.
96-100	Violent: Violent animals are out for blood, perhaps due to past history with humans or an incurable infection. Whatever the reason, they ambush and attack the PCs.

Interesting Things

When the PCs help travelers in need or scout the land for interesting things as they travel, the rules call for you to roll one of the following tables. You can also roll on these tables when you want to give the PCs treasure or a reward, but aren't sure what to give them.

Playtest Note: These tables will gain more interesting things throughout the playtest process as more equipment and lore is added to the game.

*101+ options exist for the Greed Exchange option in the temple institution in Characters.

Creature Stats

Most creatures have the same stats as PCs with the following exceptions.

Playtest Note: The current list of monsters includes just what is needed for the playtest. More creatures of will be in future tests.

Slots

Monsters don't have slots and die when they are reduced to 0 Stamina. Humans and animals have the potential to be allies, so they do have slots, which count as backpack slots for them.

If a PC or other creature with backpack slots gains the stats of a different creature, they keep their original number of backpack slots.

Power

A creature's power signifies their general toughness and threat to other creatures. In this booklet, a creature's power is scaled from 0 to 50, though future products could go even higher! The greater the power, the more deadly head-to-head combat is with the creature. The more experienced the PCs are, the more likely they are to survive an encounter with a creature of high power. Starting PCs stand no chance in a head-to-head battle against creatures of power 11 or greater (and even creatures of power 1 or more in groups can really mess them up).

Reactions

Like PCs, most creatures have only 1 reaction each round, but some have more. If a creature can use more than one reaction each round, their stat block will say so.

X/Rest

So creature's have a feature that has "X/Rest" written next to it. The creature can only use this feature X number of times between rests.

If a creature who has expended 1 or more uses of an X/Rest feature rolls a crit, they can regain 1 use of that feature as the crit's benefit.

Attacks That Grab

Some attacks can result in other creatures being grabbed. If a creature is grabbing the maximum number of creatures they can have grabbed and then uses such an attack to attack one or more targets who are not grabbed by them, the attacker must release a number of creatures they have grabbed equal to the number of ungrabbed targets to make the attack.

Animals

Animals can be friend and foe alike to crows. Some are pets (see Characters). Others are wild predators who see the PCs as their next meal.

Potential Pets

All animals are potential pets and therefore have slots, but not all of these animals are sold as pets at the village stables. Some you have to find and befriend in the wild.

If a PC turns into an animal through the use of magic, add the animal's slots to their Stamina total while in the animal form instead of giving the PC more slots.

Wild Animals

Wild animals walk the land of Cornath, searching for food, shelter, and mates. When you want to create a wild animal encounter, you can roll to determine what kind and of how many animals the PCs encounter on the appropriate animal habitat encounter table.

Ending the Fight

Animals rarely fight to the death. Most flee when it's clear to them that they can't win a fight (typically if their Stamina is at 0), or if they get what they want. A threatened animals stop fighting when the threat runs off, hungry animals stop fighting if they get something (or someone) to eat, cornered animals flee if given an opening or submit if they can't escape and are near death.

Hungry predators want to expend the least amount of energy possible to get their meal. If the PCs hide or take cover in a hard-to-reach place or surround themselves with traps that harm the animal, there's a good chance they'll eventually run off in search of an easier meal.

Humans

Humans are the other people of Cornath that interact with the PCs. Hirelings, bandits, cultists, and other NPCs use the human stat blocks. For more information on hirelings, see Characters.

Many humans the PCs interact with don't need stat blocks, but if they do, you can choose the most appropriate one from below.

Unless otherwise noted, each human has only 1 use of a listed expertise.

Ending the Fight

As sapient creatures, most humans flee or surrender when they're clearly outmatched. Even most humans with souls warped by the Miasma still have a logical part of their brain that says, "Get out of this and live to fight another day."

Most humans have a reason for fighting another group. They are defending themselves, their loved ones, or their property, robbing the other person, or have some emotional desire to do harm (though perhaps not murder). Once that desired is fulfilled, they stop fighting. A human defending their home doesn't pursue a fleeing threat, and a bandit robbing a passerby stops stabbing once they have a full purse.

A human may also stop fighting if someone or something they love is threatened, or if presented with a desirable quid pro quo.

When a human fighting alone drops to 0 Stamina, they flee, unless the Ref deems otherwise. When a group of humans battling the PCs has their number halved, they flee, unless the Ref deems otherwise.

Playtest Note: More human stat blocks are coming in future versions of the game.

Monsters

The term “monster” is used in this game to refer to creatures who are not humans or animals. There are six monster types in the core game:

- Angels: Though called angels for their otherworldly home and beauty, these creatures are far from heavenly. They radiate magic that charms and warps the minds of their prey.
- Blood Creatures: Amalgamations of flesh and fluid of humans and animals, blood creatures are held together by the same magic that makes them ravenous for the flesh of other creatures. Most are animalistic in nature.
- Demons: Beasts summoned from the pits of Hell, demons slaughter other creatures for fun. They’re fast, strong, and tenacious.
- Plants: Animated by necromancy, these plants use viney tendrils and roots to move, stab, and choke prey to quench a literal bloodthirst.
- Undead: The reanimated remains of humans, twisted into killing machines that abhor anything alive.
- Uniques: Some monsters in this book are unique experiments of the necromancers. Most have a level of sapience the other monsters lack and there exists only one of each such creature in Cornath.

Monster Names

Except for uniques, each monster doesn’t have a specific name. Instead, a monster is given a letter after it’s type for referencing in the rules, like “blood creature A” or “undead C.” The arrival of monsters threw the world into chaos, so there is no universal nomenclature for them.

Each monster has art for you to show the players, so they can come up with names for them. There’s a list of colloquial names that NPCs might use to refer to a monster so the Ref doesn’t have to come up with them on the fly (but they still can).

No Darkness Penalty

Monsters have special senses that mean darkness and dim light impose no penalty on them.

Hates And Likes

Every monster type has likes and hates, objects, other creatures, sights, smells, and sounds that can be used to attract, distract, and misdirect them. They can be used to bait traps and ambushes or allow PCs to sneak by or flee from a threat that’s beyond their capabilities.

Likes

When a monster encounters a hint of something they like, they seek out the source and investigate further. If they find something they like and no danger is apparent, the monster spends time interacting with it.

If several monsters stumble upon a small amount of something they like, they could fight over which of them gets to keep it.

All monsters like living, vulnerable prey and the distress sounds created by animals and humans.

Above all, monsters like living, so they are unlikely to engage with a like while confronted with obvious danger.

Hates

When a monster encounters something they hate, they hunt down the source and try to destroy it. If a weaker monster (with a power of 9 or lower) finds an overwhelming amount of something they hate, they might flee instead. If a monster hates cheese, they might tear a wheel apart, but would flee from an entire cavern full of dairy delights.

Above all, monsters hate dying, so they are unlikely to engage with a hate while a bunch of crows attack them, however, if one of the PCs is wearing or carrying something they hate, they prioritize attacking that PC.

Suspicious Circumstances

Monsters can be suspicious of finding something they like or hate in an unusual or dangerous place, such as their favorite food suddenly appearing in the middle of a room or an object they hate hanging over a lava pit.

If a monster approaches something they like or hate in an unusual or dangerous situation, you can have them make this test to see how they react.

2d10 + M

- ⚔11 The monster approaches the like or hate without suspicion.
- 12-16 The monster approaches with suspicion, investigating anything that seems out of place before approaching the like or hate.
- 17+ The monster doesn't approach the like or hate, and leaves the area but stays close, waiting to find out what's really going on and preparing an ambush for potential danger or gathering allies to better investigate.

Ending the Fight

Monsters are more aggressive than most humans or animals, but they're still likely to flee from a fight when it becomes clear they're going to lose. Weaker monsters tend to stick with others of their ilk, and never stray too far from that pack to pursue prey. Stronger monsters pursue prey on their own if they think they can win the fight, but Monsters in dungeons rarely pursue prey far outside the walls of their home, remaining in their territory to defend it. Monsters wandering the wilds are vulnerable, and tend to flee earlier if a battle starts going south to find safety and way to recover from their wounds.

Monsters will often allow the PCs time to flee after killing a human or pet, provided their kill is large enough to satiate their hunger.

Blood Creatures

Craelin created blood creatures—amalgamations of fluid and flesh of several creatures brought together in the form of an entirely new predator. Blood creatures have exposed musculature and red features. They know on some instinctual level that their existence is unnatural, and this knowledge drives them to feast on the flesh of humans and animals as a way to prove they are superior and belong in the world.

Likes

Blood creatures like large quantities of animal or human blood (a gallon or more), the scent of iron, and the sound of dripping liquid.

Hates

Blood creatures hate dry bones without any flesh, containers holding large quantities of clean freshwater (a gallon or more), and soap.

The Ring Collector is a creature gifted with supernatural strength and speed who is obsessed with finding and collecting magic rings. They invaded and wiped out several villages during the Necromancer War in pursuit of rings.

The Ring Collector is Craelin's advisor, Namlin. Namlin stayed loyal to the archmage after he became a necromancer even after all others left Craelin's side. As a gift, Craelin warped Namlin's flesh and turned them into a hunter of magic rings, ones meant to eventually adorn the necromancer's fingers.

Namlin became too covetous of their rings and refused to give them over to Craelin. The necromancer stripped the Ring Collector of their collection and imprisoned them in this crystal for insolence a short time before disappearing.

Undead

Warped and reanimated by the magic of Ornassa, undead despise the living. Made from the remains of dead humans, some part of even the simplest undead remembers the previous existence of all the humans who make up their living parts though vaguely. If one can tap into the most personal of memories for an undead, they just might cause the creature's overwhelming hatred of the living to falter for a moment.
